A school in Hong Kong uses a Personal Computer cluster network provided by IBM to enable students and teachers to share instruction programs and equipment. The networking software supporting the cluster was developed by the University of Waterloo in Canada.